

Strategies for developing children's communication

Get to a child's level and join in with their activities

Playing alongside a child, on the floor or on a sofa, crouching down if they are standing enables the adult to make eye contact and signals interest in what they are doing. This makes it easier for children to interact with adults. These kinds of interactions do not always need words but are important to communication.